Red the following passage:

But deep in the hearts of Indian people, one name is held even dearer than those I have mentioned - the name of Vikramaditya, who became king of Malwa, it is said in the year 57 before Christ. How many, many years ago must that be! But so clearly is he remembered that to this day when a Hindu wants to write a letter, after putting something religious at the top- "The name of the Lord", or 'Call on the Lord' or somthing of the sort and after writing his address, as we all do at the beginning of a letter, when the states the date, he would not say, 'Of the year of the Lord 1900', for instance meaning 1900 years after Christ, and we might, but he would say, 'Of the year 1957 of the Era of Viramaditya', so we can judge for our selves whether that name is ever likely to be forgotten in India.
